

High EQ vs Low EQ

And What It Costs You

In Relationships

	✓ High EQ	Low EQ
Conflict	Listens to understand, stays calm	Reacts defensively, shuts down or explodes
Intimacy	Expresses needs clearly and safely	Struggles to be vulnerable, pushes people away
Repair	Apologises genuinely, moves forward	Holds grudges, brings up the past

Impact: Low EQ quietly destroys trust. High EQ builds relationships that last.

In Parenting

	✓ High EQ	Low EQ
Child's emotions	Validates feelings, holds space	Dismisses or punishes emotions
Stress	Regulated even under pressure	Passes anxiety and tension onto children
Connection	Child feels seen and safe	Child learns to hide feelings

Impact: Your nervous system literally teaches your child's nervous system how to cope.

In Business

	✓ High EQ	Low EQ
Decisions	Balances logic with emotional data	Reactive, impulsive, or people-pleasing
Setbacks	Reflects, recalibrates, moves forward	Spirals, blames, or gives up
Vision	Leads with purpose and clarity	Driven by fear, ego, or approval

Impact: Most business failures aren't strategic — they're emotional.

In the Workplace

	✓ High EQ	Low EQ
Feedback	Receives it without crumbling	Takes it personally, becomes defensive
Collaboration	Reads the room, adapts well	Competes, dismisses, isolates
Leadership	Inspires, empathises, motivates	Micromanages, disconnects, creates fear

Impact: High EQ leaders create psychological safety. Low EQ leaders create high turnover.

In Self-Relationship

	✓ High EQ	Low EQ
Setbacks	"What can I learn?"	"I'm a failure"
Boundaries	Set clearly without guilt	Non-existent or rigid and harsh
Inner voice	Compassionate, honest	Critical, shaming, relentless

Impact: How you speak to yourself sets the tone for everything else.

"Low EQ isn't a character flaw. It's an unmet need wearing a behaviour."